Turning Point: JUNGE AKADEMIE

All in all it seems pretty straightforward. For a year, about a dozen artists consistently collaborate on joint projects (both together and individually), where they explore – beyond boundaries – their disciplines, their media of choice and their own languages, both formally and culturally. In a place known for excellence they jointly decide how they want their artistic projects to appear, and discuss this with experienced artists working in all genres. They go on excursions, engaging with the Berlin art scene in a range of different ways, and members of the Akademie and their projects: a seemingly straightforward – and yet quite unique and intricate – venture. This process takes place in a very fitting location, the Akademie building designed by Werner Düttmann on Hanseatenweg in Berlin: in the ateliers and clubrooms, the Studio for Electroacoustic Music, in the café, on the studio stage, in the lobby and surrounding areas. The many threads of their work encircle and weave their way straight through the building, incorporating it into their events. In effect, it is the fellows who are actually acting as an academy. Even though they only form a temporary team, the whole process nevertheless relies on continuity and has established itself as a proven and stable framework that remains in perpetual motion, dependent on the interaction between the artists themselves, the Akademie and its members.

We can therefore quite rightly say that the JUNGE AKADEMIE continues to spin its web, and yet begins each time anew, which is the nature of change, of the externalisation and diversification of artistic competence via a mentoring system. As an artist, I can choose someone who can advance my work, or who can confront my work with theirs – which is absolutely fantastic! The works that emerge develop a life of their own, going beyond what they express in other artistic contexts. In the end they are not just at one with themselves, but are part of a network of approaches, encounters, dialogues, and artistic perspectives, which grow and transform as the network continues to evolve. Thus, these works don’t always just begin, they also refuse to come to an end, which is not only wonderful, but also creates a certain sense of suspense. This is vital for an academy, as it provides us with an ideal turning point of sorts, which never fails to pique my curiosity.

In this sense, the fellows aren’t just picking up where the previous year left off: on the contrary, this is one of the most vital aspects of the Akademie’s work. It is the most intense method of communicating and examining fundamental questions regarding art and society, a process of interconnecting which transcends, and is often freer, than most interest-led programmes, which are sectioned into distinct disciplines. The fellows are guests – and yet they embody the most viable and consistent elements, which distinguishes our inter-disciplinary academy from others. All in all quite a complex affair, if we look closer, which can be quite enjoyable and inspiring with regard to artistic questions.

So, let’s get right into it!

Vice-President of the Akademie der Künste

Akademie der Künste on Hanseatenweg, "Blaues Haus" and garden
A fundamental role of the Akademie der Künste is to advance the work of young, international artists from all disciplines by awarding prizes and fellowships. For more than 20 years, the JUNGE AKADEMIE has mentored and supported fellows from all over the world. The JUNGE AKADEMIE was officially registered in the Akademie statutes as a specialised division in 2007. It is guided by an advisory committee, appointed by the president of the Akademie, and made up of members from all of the art sections. The JUNGE AKADEMIE oversees five international, transdisciplinary fellowship programmes that present their work to the public in a series of special events that coincide with the general members’ meetings in spring and autumn, in digital and printed media, as well as by continually re-inventing itself on various levels through its internal workshops and numerous programme offers.

This publication presents the range of different tasks in which the JUNGE AKADEMIE engages. It documents the 2015 annual programme of the JA, internal and external events involving the fellows, encounters with members of the Akademie der Künste, co-operations across the arts and between artists (in particular among the 2014 and 2015 groups of fellows), as well as with new partners from and outside the Akademie.

The forum/festival “AGORA ARTES – Interplay of the Arts” was of central importance. It included final work presentations of the 2015 Berlin Fellows in a Programme/Performance Night on 22 May, installations in Hall III on 1–7 June, and meet-and-greet opportunities with fellows from different years, designed to bring together and build relations between the transdisciplinary groups, as well as the PLENUM of the newer fellows. The unique potential of each generation of fellows to forge a “Kultur des Mit-ein-ander” (culture with one/an(d)other) that allows the genesis of new ideas to be as productive as possible, is the particular appeal, challenge and incentive of the JUNGE AKADEMIE in the sense of “Vielfalt JA! – über Grenzen hinweg” (Pluralism JA! – Beyond Borders). The fellows are ambassadors of their artistic identities and of the cultural backgrounds of their countries of origin. In turn they also serve as the Akademie der Künste’s ambassadors to the rest of the world, sharing their personal experiences and furthering the principles of transdisciplinary exchange acquired at the JUNGE AKADEMIE.

The JUNGE AKADEMIE is a transboundary mediator, initiator and inspirer of creative exchange, interaction and communality that supports the artistic research of young, international artists working in various genres. Current and future challenges require socio-holistically developed, transdisciplinary ideas, in order to tap into the potential available and create viable solutions that can be applied to maximum effect. Transboundary collaboration in all its many forms is clearly the guiding spirit of the JUNGE AKADEMIE. It is particularly timely in an era over-shadowed by displacement, terror, trauma, and fear in many parts of the world, but equally elevated by the efforts of dedicated volunteers in it for the long haul, ad hoc relief efforts and other initiatives, which strongly shape the foundations of our society. It applies to all conceivable and perhaps – as yet – unimagined possibilities that we can and should contemplate self-critically and responsibly. Our engagement with other human beings nourishes a fundamental respect for that which is different, and, in sustained discourse, acquaints itself with what is other, creating a mutual fundament of trust, respect and growing appreciation for each other – occasionally even transforming strangers into friends. Processes that increase trust are forged in collaboration based on different motivations. Like the unshakable belief in life, this is the place where humanity truly dwells, free of ancestry, culture and beliefs. It is what shapes the foundation for a peaceful, mutually supportive and enriching coexistence with different strengths, creating a powerful synergy that opposes marginalisation, discrimination, violence and persecution.

The key objectives outlined here defined all the JUNGE AKADEMIE’s activities yet again in 2015. They included both the final presentation of works of the previous year’s fellows, AGORA ARTES (23 May – 7 June), which coincided with the start for this year’s fellows, as well as preparatory workshops in June (1–5 June) and September (13–18 Sept) on the Akademie’s main theme, DEMO:POLIS. The Right to Public Space (exhibition and special events in spring 2016). Now, however, the main focus at the Akademie der Künste is changing again. Along with the recent arrival of refugees, whose conflicts have long been held at a distance and whose plights are now experienced right in the heart of Europe, there is a growing awareness and sudden need for broad rethinking in many areas, much of which still cannot be foreseen.

The Fellows Meeting

MAY 2015

Each year the JUNGE AKADEMIE develops a fully packed, in-house programme by and for its fellows, parallel to the general members’ meeting held at the Akademie der Künste in spring, enabling encounters on many levels. This includes familiarising new fellows with local working conditions, fostering exchanges among fellows and alumni from different years, and between the previous year’s and this year’s fellows, and conversations with members of the Akademie, important partners in Berlin and other locations, as well as an interested public.

The JUNGE AKADEMIE presents itself to the public in several special events that define cooperative working methods and collaboration of fellows from various years and support programmes. The 2015 programme consisted of 28 fellows (from all artistic disciplines) and 15 countries, including Japan, Mexico, Sweden, South Korea, the Czech Republic and Turkey. On 22 May “AGORA ARTES. Interplay of the Arts” began with a long Programme Night. A presentation of work by the 2014 fellows was exhibited with AGORA ARTES until 7 June in Hall 3. In the context of AGORA ARTES, on 26 May 2014 fellows at the Villa Serpentara presented their work in Olevano Romano, Italy, and on 28 May, the new 2015 fellows held short presentations in the public PLENUM.

Thus, the new fellows of 2015 were welcomed as part of AGORA ARTES, met internally, where they shared their work concepts and artistic points of view, and introduced themselves to members during the section meetings at the general members’ meeting and in the public PLENUM. They went on excursions in the Hansaviertel, and visited the Akademie archives on Robert-Koch-Platz, Behnisch’s building on Pariser Platz, the Studio for Electroacoustic Music, and the editorial offices of the Akademie journal Sinn und Form. Moreover, they discovered the architectural features of Werner Düttmann’s building on Hanseatenweg, which is known for inspiring artistic dialogue.

Genius Loci – Impulses for New Art?
The Akademie building on Hanseatenweg was built in 1960 as a manifesto or as a response to the question: What is an academy today? Embodying the collections and very life force of the Akademie, this unique location where “creative powers from all around the world” meet was meant to foster “mutual understanding between peoples” and “to put [the Akademie] in a position […] to have an impact both out in the world and to draw it inside” (Werner Düttmann). – As a creative domain for the JA, and in the full sense of the German word’s double meaning, we could not wish for an “ansprechenderen” (more suitable and appealing / engaging and interactive) point of origin for collaborations that aim to break down barriers (for more information on this theme, see the documentation “JUNGE AKADEMIE 2014”).

3/4 Private reception at the Akademie for the 2015 Fellows, hosted by the Junge Freunde
AGORA ARTES began in the lobby near the main staircase and the beech garden, and continued in Hall 3, where most of the works of the Berlin Fellows – the Akademie der Künste’s international artists-in-residence – were displayed. AGORA ARTES is a forum for diverse expressions of individual and overarching artistic collaborations encompassing image series (painting, photography), installations, readings, audio works, performances, films, discussions and artists’ talks, and also provides space for artistic experiments, such as “ASMR Yourself”, which invites visitors to engage with intriguing and pleasant experiences by encouraging them to experiment on themselves.

AGORA ARTES 2015 was characterised by dialogically reflexive installations bridging physical distances, reflected inner and outer states, and created contrasting and surprisingly harmonious artistic cooperations. It was equally defined by the projects of individual fellows, interested in exploring their aims through various artistic forms, and joint projects between fellows, who exchanged different disciplines, backgrounds and cultures. The result was not merely a meeting of human minds, but also a convergence of architecture and film, German and Israeli books and their translations, photography and literature juxtaposed to an audio play, music and performances in a Turkish-Brazilian co-production, silent and animated stage language from a Greek perspective, allusive on-site explorations of a Czech sculptor, enticing spatial transformations by a German architect, and to the polyphonic choir of all fellows’ voices set to music, which came together to form the symphonic prelude to AGORA ARTES (the green wall facing visitors in the entrance lobby).
The preceding year’s fellows presented works created between May 2014 and 2015 in highly original ways. These young artists from all over the world shared their diverse perceptions, thought processes and approaches. They came together to create another reality, space, and opportunity for unconventional solutions. The JUNGE AKADEMIE’s leading principle “Vielfalt JA! – über Grenzen hinweg” (Pluralism JA! – Beyond Borders), served as the point of origin for individual works and productions of teams that were naturally drawn together. Unique talents converged beyond personal limitations, artistic intentions, disciplines, assigned artistic categories and countries of origin, as demonstrated by Rafael Nassif’s (Brazil) “the artists’ meeting” in the entrance lobby, a sound installation of an international vocal symphony composed with the voices of all the 2014 fellows, which was performed at the opening of AGORA ARTES. Different aesthetic languages were used to present individual experiments reflecting these transdisciplinary qualities, such as in “civil”, Stella Christodouloupolou’s (Greece) theatrical production, and in “in-between”, a series of photographic stills. The cross-disciplinary, joint projects of several fellows using film, literature and design, also presented a very high level of these qualities in a range of different ways, as for instance in Ron Segal (Israel) and Tatsuya Kawahara’s (Japan) “Migrating Books”, the impressive, alienating and archaic musical dance performance “Dust Devil” by and with Özlem Alkiş (Turkey), which she created with Rafael Nassif, as well as the video “Dogpark” by Özlem Alkiş and Neele Hülcker (Germany), which combined film, dance and music.

Other projects communicated narratives crossing time and space, installations that experimented with light and sound, or reflected on other external or internal occurrences, alluding to hidden qualities or more remote contexts. Created as stand-alone works, or influenced by situations or location, such as the group of buildings of the Akademie der Künste on Hanseatenweg and surrounding grounds, it is worth mentioning the contiguous yet so very different installations also presented, such as “-facade” by Klaus Kleine (Germany), “A Girl that Once Moved” by Dominik Lang (Czech Republic) and “Atelier 3” by Dirk Peisl (Germany). Comparing “Migrating Books” and “-facade”, we are surprised by the seemingly related and yet autonomous approaches to art, in the tradition of Minimal Art on the one hand and a seemingly unfinished construction from the 8th century on the other. The artistic research promoted by the JUNGE AKADEMIE was also made use of for an unusual project encompassing art and therapy. Visitors could register with “ASMR Yourself”, an agency created specifically for this project, in order to experience unaccustomed sensations created by the artist Neele Hülcker, and to subject themselves to a liminal, acoustically triggered experience, ranging between playfulness and gravity. Two panel discussions between the fellows and the art critic Nicola Kuhn from the German daily newspaper Der Tagesspiegel and two artists’ talks with Valeria Luiselli and Andrzej Tichý completed the “AGORA ARTES” Programme Night, which more than 300 predominantly young visitors attended, and which was clearly an overall success (by the end of the exhibition on 7 June, which also marked the end of Fellows’ Month, the projects had been viewed by 1108 visitors).

The arts section of this German daily wrote: “The intercommunion of disciplines, the contextue of human and artistic endeavours are at the forefront. The Akademie as an agora, a fairground of the arts. And of contradictions [...]. The inter and counterplay of the arts is stimulating and productive [...]. The original concept of the academy still seems to work for the young.” (Birgit Rieger, “Programme Night at the Akademie der Künste. No Time for Disputes at Work. Young painters, writers, composers convene at the Akademie der Künste on Hanseatenweg”, Der Tagesspiegel, 31 May 2015)

DUST DEVIL* (WORK IN PROGRESS)
ÖZLEM ALKIŞ
Dancer, choreographer

This dance performance examines the movements of one body to another, how a motif develops and transforms into another within a repeating structure. What oscillations exist between the dancers’ bodies and within the space? A motif is not only a pattern for movement or form, but rather a motivation or motto that drives us. We develop motifs and play with them. Which forms come into being as a result?

* A “dust devil” is a type of whirlwind and we examine it as a natural property, an impression and a physical phenomenon.

Memphis follows the simple yet powerful Conradian premise, “We live, as we dream – alone.” It is the story of two journeys: one present, the other imagined. The first is a family’s road trip through the United States – a contemporary, foreign family, slowly and hesitantly acclimatising to a new homeland. The second is the hypothetical journey of two children travelling alone towards Apacheria. Initial fragments of the novel will be read. (Valeria Luiselli)

Actress and art photographer

A performance which seeks to unravel the thread of Greece’s modern history. While we consider the domino effect of political decisions and events that have determined Greek reality, we search for the nature of our heritage from earlier generations across the course of history, which is indestructible. And thus we learn another way to make amends, to let justice prevail so that we can continue. Fundamental, universal questions emerge, such as what it means to “belong”, and about our motivations for certain actions. I strongly believe that we have to take a step back to take a step forward.

A Philippine woman is talking on Skype. She is sitting atop her loft bed, which is covered by sheets. It looks like a cave. We hear the voices of other people who occupy the same room. The woman looks tired, but is neatly dressed. A voice offscreen asks her questions: about cleaning the toilet, security in the house, the games she will play with the children of her masters. Painful questions. Humiliating questions. The Philippine woman guards her dignity. However, the voice offscreen is relentless, revealing the power relationship in this neocolonial system.

- -facade, 2014
  Steel, 450 cm × 690 cm × 3 cm (variable)

With this work, the sculptor Klaus Kleine is developing an expansive installation in several parts, based on an abstraction of incomplete historic 8th-century architecture. On the one hand, the floor-to-ceiling steel segments function as autonomous sculptures while on the other hand, they form part of a continuous entire structure that is integrated into the exhibition situation in segments.
The lines of the ornament are determined by a structure that can be further and further extended and can be understood both as a space/sculpture and an area/image.

I capture fleeting moments and impressions on camera and then reconstruct them in my paintings. Cities have had a major impact on my work, especially signs, logos, symbols and building sites. To me, it’s often graffiti and lettering on street signs that shape the character of a street and leave a lasting visual impression. I use formats that are approximately life-size. Large canvases give a subject spatial presence and bring out the charisma of the original objects. (Hye Kyoung Kwon)

DOMINIK LANG
- A Girl that once moved, 2015
  Installation

A Girl that once moved uses an existing sculpture, the seated figure of a small girl which Lang found in the abandoned studio of his father. The artist puts himself in the position of both the sculptor, as well as choreographer, who navigates the figure in the space according to a previously created script. The aim is to stage an experience similar to that of watching a performance or a dance piece. This way the sculpture will be able to stand up from the chair, walk in the room, leave traces on the floor, walk outside and finally hide in the bushes, in an effort to achieve the impossible through sculpture: to represent a movement.

Voices of scholarship holders recorded during the plenary session of the Young Academy were, so-to-speak, combined to form a montage of a single voice that partly represents a pure sound experience and partly contains semantic meanings, with both aspects merging, which I consider to be a worth way of communicating about/through art. The interaction between light, sound, material and geometrically defined space in Atelier 3 enables the installation to not only produce a (working) atmosphere that meets the new use-based requirements, but also a completely new spatial composition and effect.

Migrating Books examines the inspiring journey from book annihilation to book translation. Taking its departure from Micha Ullman’s memorial, the Bibliothek that commemorates the infamous Nazi book burning on Bebelplatz in 1933, Migrating Books focuses on the books that have been “migrating” between Israel and Germany ever since, recreating a cultural link.

2014 Villa Serpentara Fellows Present Their Projects

The Villa Serpentara Fellowship is administered as part of the JUNGE AKADEMIE’s fellowship programme, a tradition initiated by the Prussian Academy of Arts, which sent individual artists there. It was made possible by an inheritance, decreed by testament in 1907, which took effect in 1915. In 1906, the sculptor Heinrich Gerhardt (1823–1915) built a small artists’ residence, which he named Serpentara (Snake Grove), on the edge of an evergreen oak forest above the municipality of Olevano Romano in Italy. The woody mountain ridge (in contrast to the otherwise rather bare, surrounding landscape) had attained art historical importance by the early 19th century, when nearly all the German Romantic painters (especially the Nazarenes) and draftsmen who were enthusiastic about Italy discovered this site as a popular motif (also because of its prominent rock formations) and made it into a favoured place for summer celebrations. In 1873, dedicated artists had taken up a collection to ensure that this piece of land was spared the threat of being cleared so that the felled oaks could be made into railway sleepers, and bequeathed it as a present to the German Empire, the protector of the Prussian Academy.

Records show that fellows of the Akademie der Künste have availed themselves of this working and residency grant in Italy since 1961. Originally only open to visual artists, since 1965 it has also included applicants from other disciplines. As of 2013, proposals from all six art sections are taken into account in regular rotation, and the Akademie Senate makes the final decision.

During the selection process, presided over by a jury of Akademie members, Berlin artists are given priority for a three-month artists-in-residence stay in Olevano, Italy. The Villa Massimo in Rome supports the programme proprietor in Berlin in administrative matters and in the supervision of the fellows on location.

Reports made by the Serpentara Fellows about projects they developed during their fellowship residencies abroad — stemming from historical connections, but chiefly about the actual work that evolved in Italy — complement the events presented by the JUNGE AKADEMIE during the Fellows’ Month.
In 2015, the following Villa Serpentara fellows gave accounts of their works developed in Olevano in 2014:

KERSTIN GOTTSCHALK
(Fellow, Visual Arts Section)
I created extensive series of works on paper during my stay at the Villa Serpentara, Italy. For example, I dipped various grasses in ink, rolling each one out on paper. In addition, I made my floor piece Flour, salt, water, oil mixed into a dough and rolled out on the floor which I rolled out on the tile floor of the studio using a traditional rolling pin. (Kerstin Gottschalk)

ULF STOLTERFOHT
(Fellow, Literature Section)
Above all, one thing has to be said about the Villa Serpentara: I don’t know of a place better suited to working on something in peace, without distractions. If a hedgehog should drop by in the afternoon, or a badger in the evening, then that pretty much sums up the chances for social contact. And if by chance you feel terribly lonely, then you go to a bar, accept a consecrated image of St. Francis — in 3D, of course — and hang it above your bed, now safe in the knowledge that nothing can happen to you at night either. (Ulf Stolterfoht)

ELISE EEREATS
(Fellow, Visual Arts Section)
In the countryside surrounding the Villa Serpentara there were kilns, which were used to produce bricks. The traditional crafts of the remote area of Olevano Romano inspired me to create new sculptures and video works closely connected to this place, which is also a natural source for materials. Living in seclusion at the Villa Serpentara allowed me to contemplate essential questions regarding the character and properties of objects, and to become more aware of how we perceive and understand the world. (Elise Eeraerts)
The JUNGE AKADEMIE welcomed the newly arrived, international Berlin Fellows, who were selected by all the art sections of the Akademie der Künste. For two weeks, in late May and early June, this year’s fellows came together for internal workshops, excursions and encounters at the Akademie building on Hanseatenweg. They got to know each other better, and began to freely explore the possibilities of transdisciplinary communication and co-production.

In a public PLENUM on 28 May, the 2015 Fellows (twelve in all from eight countries) provided insights into their current projects and progress. The evening offered the public a rare opportunity to discover the range of artistic practices, and to directly engage with young artists from around the world. In the Visual Arts Section, Sebastian Gräfe (Germany) surprised us with his sophisticated use of irony and Dadaesque-Romantic humour, as did Otavio Schipper’s (Brazil) nostalgic and communicative electrical installations and a “moving” elevator still life. In the Architecture Section, Felix Lüdicke (Germany) and Theresa Schütz (Austria) used humour and poetry seductively to guide us through their diverse and tested initiatives for shared experiences in public spaces. In the Music Section, Amir Teymuri’s (Iran) rigidly composed computer music contrasted with Matthias Kranebitter’s (Austria) anarcho-inspired compositions, defying all forms of appropriation. In the Literature Section, Liat Elkayam’s (Israel) writing assumed a distanced internal/external perspective, and Tanja Maljartschuk (Ukraine) manifested the power of resistance in exile by strongly reducing her German prose to elementary levels of expression. Caitlin van der Maas (the Netherlands), from the Performing Arts Section, made an impact with her cold-blooded theatre piece, in which a female suicide bomber in the midst of an abandoned swimming pool comes threateningly close to the audience. In the Film and Media Arts Section, Thomas Ladenburger (Germany) transported us to the centre of Marrakesh, to the living culture of travelling entertainers and storytellers whose craft is already dying out. Aslı Özarslan reported on her involvement in helping refugees in Berlin, and work on the female mayor of Cizre, a Kurdish city on the Syrian-Iraqi border to Turkey, where, in many respects, this young woman (who grew up in Bremen, but returned to Turkey) nevertheless remains a foreigner within her native country.

The internal Workshop Week (1–4 June) was dedicated to DEMO:POLIS (People – Spaces – Cities. For Broader Understanding of Public Space Today), the Akademie der Künste’s central theme in 2016. Wilfried Wang, curator of the exhibition and deputy director of the Architecture Section, gave the introduction. Many members from all art sections enthusiastically participated far beyond the work they had already contributed, engaging in various activities for several days with great commitment. We would particularly like to thank Wilfried Wang, Regine Keller and Peter Zionicky (Architecture), Hubertus von Amelunxen (Visual Arts), Iris ter Schiphorst and Mathias Spahlinger (Music), Nele Hertling and Reinhold Hoffmann (Performing Arts), Kathrin Röggla and Ulrich Peltzer (Literature), Christian Petzold (Film and Media Arts) and our guest Christoph Hochhäusler, whose accounts of their work demonstrated an exciting variety of possible approaches to the theme of “public space”. During this time, an aesthetic and artistically grounded discourse between members and fellows emerged casually and organically, smoothly cutting through any proverbial generational gaps or artistic differences. Thus – quite effectively – manifesting the very essence at the heart of the nearly 320-year-old Akademie der Künste.

Next year’s annual review will cover this theme more extensively.

Fellows’ Welcome, 2015

As every year, on 28 May 2015 the Junge Freunde welcomed the new group of fellows by organising a reception in the clubroom on Hanseatenweg, which took place after the fellows gave an impressive presentation of their projects to the public. This hospitable gesture made the fellows feel very welcome at the Akademie, and ensured that they were off to a good start in their residency in Berlin. From the outset, the 12 young artists from Brazil, Germany, Iran, Israel, Austria, the Netherlands, Ukraine and Hungary and the many Junge Freunde engaged in lively discussions, their diverse working and artistic backgrounds enriching their conversations further. The Junge Freunde asked the fellows to talk in more detail about the works they had presented. They subsequently invited the artists to meet up informally and join them for events in Berlin, as they looked forward to supporting the fellows in activities outside the Akademie and generally helping them to get oriented. The success of this evening will surely lead to an exchange of new impulses and many lively cooperations that will mutually inspire this year’s fellows and the group of Junge Freunde.
